The Human Archetype

Jefferson Rey S. Tayag

[The Human / The Humanity]: Archetype

• Core: (AWARENESS)

• Pillars: (FEEL. CHOOSE. EXIST.)

[Feel]: (from numbness to explosion)

[Choose]: (to act or not)

[Exist]: (to affirm or remain passive)

The Human may lose one, two, or all three pillars and still be Human, not by perfection, but by possibility.

The Human is paradox itself:

- The Humble Hypocrite

- The Prideful Saint

- The Generous Beggar

- The Depressed Comedian

- The Childish Elder

There is no Shadow apart from Light, all contradictions are fully contained.

Because "The Human" contains contradictions, Awareness is both the guide and witness of their existence.

To be The Human is to be Aware:

• Aware of your feelings, even numb

• Aware of your choices, even inaction

• Aware of your existence, even passivity

• Aware of the power to do the opposite of what I've mentioned above

The Human is not defined by ideal, perfection, or transcendence, but by lucidity, the clear recognition of oneself in all one's contradictions.
